

Deadmans Tome January 2011 Edition

January unfolds with a handful of stories. David Whelans Fly suits as our insane opener. Peek into the written rant of a deranged, antisocial schizophrenic during a moment of brief serenity before he plunges into another gripping and life-ending episode. The Dream, by Mary Burger, haunts you with an unfriendly reminder that not even your dreams can offer solace. Run as you might, fight as you will, but the nightmare will manifest without your consent. Relive a tried and true horror classic in Sam Williams Rotted Soil. Doubt as you will but there are some things that just belong in horror, and one of those is the ambiguous, gazing, questionable eyes of a scarecrow. For a proper introduction we have Alexis Childs Corpse Shroud and we want to give out a prize for those that participate in this months contest.
